Urgent / Important Sort

Move each item from your brain dump into one box. Be honest: not everything that feels urgent is important, and not everything important needs to happen today.

Not Mine to Carry

Some of what sits in your head belongs to someone else, or to no one at all. Name it here, notice whose it really is, and choose one small way to hand it back.

| What I'm holding                                                                          | Whose is it, really?                                                                      | One way to hand it back                                                                   |

One thing I'm allowed to put down this week

---

---

---

"I can care about this without carrying all of it."

Thought check

Date: _____

When a thought feels heavy, slowing it down on paper can make it easier to look at. Take one moment, go box by box, and write as much or as little as you like.

1 The situation

What happened, where and when? Stick to what a camera would have seen.

---

---

---

2 The thought

What went through my mind? Write it the way it sounded in my head.

---

---

---

How strongly do I believe it right now? ____ %

3 What supports it / what doesn't

Look for facts, the way a fair-minded friend would.

What supports it

---

---

---

---

What doesn't

---

---

---

---

4 A more balanced way to see it

With both columns in view, how could I put this in a fairer, kinder way?

---

---

---

---

5 One small next step

One small, doable thing for today or tomorrow.

---

Gentle reminder: these are tools for everyday life. If you're struggling, talking to a professional or a local helpline is a strong step, not a weak one.

You made some room.

Look back at your pages: it's out of your head and onto paper. Keep this kit somewhere easy to find and come back whenever your mind feels full.

BEFORE YOU GO

- ☐ Pick one thing from "Do" for today
- ☐ Choose one "Delegate" and decide who to ask
- ☐ Cross out one "Drop" and let it go

A NOTE ON SUPPORT

Gentle reminder: these are tools for everyday life. If you're struggling, talking to a professional or a local helpline is a strong step, not a weak one.

Take what helps, leave the rest.
